

EMLS Institution FAQ

Common questions for organisations considering EMLS

Access-first learning | modular delivery | partner-ready implementation

This FAQ is written for schools, councils, libraries, education providers, disability services, NGOs and partner organisations considering EMLS.

What is EMLS?

EMLS is EduLinked's modular learning system. It supports accessible, structured and facilitator-ready learning across different public, institutional and community settings.

Is EMLS a single course?

No. EMLS is a modular system. An organisation may start with one module, a small pilot, a specialist pathway, or a broader implementation depending on scope and readiness.

Who is EMLS for?

EMLS may suit schools, libraries, councils, community organisations, disability providers, learning providers, public programs and inclusive education settings.

Can EMLS be adapted for different learners?

Yes. EMLS is designed around access planning and flexible participation. Adaptation depends on the selected modules, learner needs and agreed scope.

Does EMLS include Easy Read or accessible formats?

Accessible formats can be included where they are part of the agreed scope. These may include plain language, Easy Read-style summaries, captions, transcripts or symbol-supported materials.

Can our staff facilitate EMLS?

Potentially. Some organisations may use their own facilitators with guidance or training. Others may need EduLinked-led support or a shared delivery model.

Is EMLS accredited?

EMLS can recognise learning participation or completion where agreed, but it should not be described as formal accreditation unless a specific accredited arrangement has been confirmed in writing.

Can EMLS be piloted before a larger rollout?

Yes. A pilot is often the best way to test fit, access needs, delivery flow and reporting requirements before scaling.

What outcomes can be reported?

Possible reporting areas include participation, learner confidence, access needs, facilitator feedback, module completion, resource usefulness and partner satisfaction. Final measures depend on the agreed evaluation plan.
